With a staff of more than 130, you're sure to find someone who can give you exactly what you want, whether it's a stick-straight blowout or a more artistic cut using creative techniques such as "stitching" and straight-edge razor cutting. Celebs (Rachael Ray and Naomi Watts are customers) to downtown hipsters to everything in between, can be seen frequenting the salon. Cuts ($90 and up), shampoos and blowouts ($65 and up), and highlights ($150 and up) all come with complimentary shoulder and neck massages, so you're sure to leave looking—and feeling—good. Awesome, you're subscribed! Thanks for subscribing! Look out for your first newsletter in your inbox soon! We already told you about New York City's Whittemore House Salon, which vamps on its historic location (the building was once a stop on the underground railroad and the site where John Wilkes Booth tried to plot the kidnapping of President Lincoln.) Well, we recently heard of two other NYC salons commanding extra attention—this time by making a visit to them a cultural experience. The Pepper Pastor salon near South Street Seaport is working an old-world angle, offering full tea service and a classically glamorous ambiance, complete with an antique Victorian sofa and dizzily pretty chandelier. While at Rockefeller Center in midtown, the Patrick Melville Salon is bringing a little art history to its recently renovated space, teaming up with the William Bennett Gallery to showcase a rotating exhibition of paintings by Picasso, Dali, Chagall, and Miro. What think—gimmicks? Or enough to get you to check out a salon?RELATED LINKS: Daily Beauty Reporter: Hair Plus History: The Allure A-List Directory: New York City: Daily Beauty Reporter: The Perfect Beach Hair: Editors' Best Hair Secrets: Daily Beauty Reporter: The Top Summer Hair Products How to Build Clientele as a Nail... How to Open a Prom Gown Store How to Increase Banquet Revenue Media Platforms Design TeamAs anyone who's ever experienced a thorough beauty salon scrubbing knows, getting your hair shampooed can be an almost orgasmic experience. No big surprise there. After all, your scalp is an erogenous zone—a place super-sensitive to touch—and just like your nipples or the nape of your neck, it's rarely handled by other people. "Hands-on scalp stimulation works the same way it does during a massage: by increasing blood flow and releasing tension," says Amy Wechsler, M.D., a New York dermatologist and psychiatrist. But there's a scientific reason for the overwhelming pleasure response: As you're being rubbed the right way during your hair shampoo the nerve endings in your scalp send information to the sensory cortex (the brain's "Goody!" center, which registers comfort and relaxation). In response, the sensory cortex lights up like a switchboard during an American Idol voting night and releases feel-good hormones like dopamine and serotonin, says neurosurgeon Larry McCleary, M.D., the author of The Brain Trust Program. Add to that the soothing stimulus of the hot water, and you've got one toe-curling experience. Watch Next By Chron Contributor Updated August 19, 2021 Receptionists are essential in keeping salons running smoothly and making clients happy. As the first and last person most clients see, the receptionist serves as a welcoming face and leaves a lasting impression on clients. Salon assistant duties checklist varies depending on the size of the salon, but some are common in the industry. Salon reception duties include taking care of clients. The duty checklist includes extending friendly greetings in person and on the phone; making customers feel welcome by offering them a beverage or snack, if appropriate, or showing them to dressing rooms to change into robes; notifying the stylists of client arrivals; and taking clients' money at the end of their visits, which means you should be comfortable working a cash register. Salon receptionist responsibilities also include answering questions for clients and making or changing appointments as necessary, according to Zippia. They must have a pleasant and helpful demeanor to make sure the clients have enjoyable visits from start to finish. Clients like to feel pampered when they go to a salon, and this feeling starts the moment they walk in the door. A receptionist checklist includes keeping the front area neat, clean and homey. As a receptionist, you should straighten magazines and style books several times during your shift, push couch or chair cushions back into place and pick up any trash left by clients. If the salon offers drinks and snacks, keep them constantly replenished. Sweep and wipe down the area often so no stray hairs greet customers. Clients visit salons prepared to pay for services such as haircuts and styles, but many seek products to help them achieve salon looks at home. Receptionists should know the salon's product lines to help clients choose what fits their needs, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Receptionists also should know how to up-sell. Instead of just asking the clients to pay for services, receptionists offer products that are on special or encourage clients to make their next appointments—perhaps with some trendy highlights instead of just a cut and style. Stylists might recommend products for their clients, but they don't keep up with what other stylists sell. Receptionists, who stay near the front the majority of the time, often add inventory management to their daily checklist. They should know how many of each item the salon typically stocks and when it's time to reorder. Receptionists also restock shelves as necessary, creating seasonal or promotional displays. In L.A.'s growing speakeasy scene, there's a collective drive toward authenticity: presenting a genuine, impeccably accurate Prohibition-era environment so detailed that it sends a 21st century drinker back in time. Which leads us to a small, wondrous operation hidden on the third floor of a North Hollywood building. Salon, two floors above the Federal Bar on Lankershim Boulevard, is a room right out of a Fitzgerald novel: plush leather sofas, cast iron side tables, velvet drapes. Soft Edison lighting falls on a baby grand piano, a false bookcase, an old chess board and old photos hanging on an exposed brick wall. Velour wallpaper begins near a dark wooden island bar where a young mixologist (the only modern fixture in the bar) is serving up classic drinks and innovative, original concoctions. Salon is the brainchild of Damian Windsor, one of the most respected bartenders in the game who's tended at Cliftons, Seven Grand, the Roger Room and the Warwick, among others. Windsor uses no advertising, no signs that acknowledge Salon's existence. You won't need a password, just an escorted walk up a back stairway. Often the setting for private parties, reunions and spillover from the concert hall in the next room, the vibe is unpredictable. On quiet nights, Salon is nothing more than L.A.'s most authentic speakeasy. Vitals The scene: Salon is an experiment in opposites. The brooding colors and low lighting create a warm, sophisticated feel reminiscent of an aristocrat's living room where imbibers speak in hushed tones over the sound of rolling cocktail ice cubes. At times, however, the dance music from next door, or from Salon's occasional DJ, generates a trendy, club atmosphere. Both are equally possible, and both work. Some nights Salon is a cocktail hunter's best kept hideaway. Other nights it pulsates like a singles party. Come for one scenario, but be prepared for the other. Good for: Classic cocktail appreciation in a must-see environment. Come early for intimate conversation. You'll have your choice of elegant sofas, the chessboard table for two, six bar stools or bar counter seats up against the velour wall. Take in the decor and talk spirits with the bartender or other patrons who came for the same experience. Come later if you're open to mixing it up with strangers and maybe dusting off your dance moves. Drink this: Salon's focused, two-sided cocktail menu includes classics and signature variations along with appropriate glassware icons next to each drink. The Pearl Button ($13) is a sweet frothy concoction on crushed ice in a wine glass. The egg whites and seltzer water create a unique texture, while the rum, lemon and Cocchi Americano blend in a refreshing sweetness. The Tequila Por Mi Amante ($12) is a simple blend of tequila blanco and a strawberry-flavored vermouth called Chamberyzette. The Eastern Sour ($12) is Salon's complex spin on a whiskey sour. Also sweet and in a wine glass, the orgeat and bitters really come out to play while the smell is of the tartest berry for a truly captivating blend of sweet and savory. Salon also serves a red and white wine, two bottled beers and the most sought after bourbon on the planet, Pappy Van Winkle, $20 for a glass of 10-year an $45 for a glass of 12. Our tip: Reservations are a good idea. At the very least call ahead so a private party doesn't derail your plans. The large lot behind the building offers valet parking but free street parking abounds on Lankershim and adjacent side streets.
